ABOUT THE WORKSHOP

Predatory publications, publish-or-perish pressure, evolving publishing models, and AI-powered writing tools are creating significant challenges in identifying original research. Maintaining scientific integrity and knowledge updates call for new approaches to research evaluation and dissemination. The alarming rise in retraction of research papers, driven by falsification, fabrication, and plagiarism of data highlights the essential role of editors and reviewers in maintaining the quality and integrity of the scientific records. Choosing reviewers with relevant expertise and strong ethical values can ensure critical evaluation of manuscripts. To effectively address this issue, a thorough training in research ethics, responsible authorship and data management, robust editorial policies is needed. Awareness about predatory journals can protect researchers from falling prey to unethical publishing practices. The Centre for Publication Ethics (CPE) and Center for Complementary and Integrative Health (CCIH) are jointly organizing a two-day workshop for Journal Editors and Reviewers on “Best Practices for Editors and Reviewers” on February 23-24, 2024.
